Profile

The Cache La Poudre River Corridor is located in north central Colorado. It begins at the eastern edge of the Arapaho-Roosevelt National Forest and extends east through Fort Collins and Larimer County to Greeley and Weld County up to ¼ mile west of its confluence with the South Platte River. The boundary of the 40-mile Corridor is the river's 100-year floodplain. It commemorates the role of water development and management in the American West. The legislation provides "for the interpretation of the unique and significant contributions to our national heritage of cultural and historical lands, waterways and structures within the Corridor."
